(NOTE: Account Manager is no longer supported with Microsoft Active Directory in Windows Server 2008. You can find existing instructions here, and it is recommended that you migrate away from Account Manager in Windows Server 2008.) Account Manager helps administrators manage accounts in Active Directory. Account Manager provides the following features: * Provides access to the user account management functions, such as enabling, disabling, and changing password, and locking/relocking the account. Account Manager also provides the ability to perform certain kinds of computer account tasks, for example: configuring computer accounts using Multiple Domain Controllers, modifying and extending computer accounts for automatic updates, and automatically renewing network logon sessions. * Locks the user account with a strong password on a computer or on a domain controller. This is a required prerequisite to the setup of a standalone user account. * Provides information about the groups and users on the computer, their existence on a domain controller, the existence of a roaming profile, and much more. * Locks the computer, sets the computer's local security policy, and (if the account is configured with Local Administrator access) also enables local administrators. Local Administrators are in a special context. They can administer a computer account while locked by performing local and domain account tasks. They can create custom groups and perform various other tasks. * Performs automated tasks on all computers in a domain, including: · Booting computers, · Creating a local administrative account on each computer, · Enabling the computers to start again after a system failure, · Enabling the computers to start again after a restart, · Automatically synchronizing computer accounts and settings, · Changing computer account passwords, · Enabling local administrators on the computer, · Setting the computer to be a member of a particular group, · Synchronizing settings for multiple computers to the domain controller, and · Creating a roaming administrative account on the domain controller. * Provides information about the domain and how it is configured for the computer. * Performs various administrative tasks on a computer that requires Local Administrator access: · Enables and disables Local Administrator rights for a computer, · Sets the computer's local security policy, · Creates a computer account, · Changes passwords of computer accounts, · Locks the computer account and sets the computer's local security policy, · Performs other tasks that a local administrator can perform, and · Sets the domain controller b7e8fd5c8
