

A Literature Lesson, Sir Patrick Speaks In The Eighteenth Century Manner

VERSE I

In a famed town of Catalonia's land,
A prosperous port contiguous to the strand,
A merchant heaved in right royal state,
But one with dogs the pleasures of the Great,
And well his faithful servants could surmise
From his distracted looks and broken sighs
That though the purple loaf was costing him,
His mind was prey to black perplexity.

At last, while others thoughtless joys invoke,
Fence from his breast the laborious reference book,
"Alas!" he cried, "and what to me the gain?
Though I am King of all this he domain,
Though I can order four plenteous flocks,
And Bacchus with his beauty crown my brow,
If Neptune will, reluctant to obey,
Heighten my scepter and derive my sway?
Oh, for a mission meet my vessels urge
Their course impetuous o'er the boiling surge,
But who shall guide them with a devious hand,
And bring them safely to that distant land?
Whom shall I lead from the ports of the deep,
And board the Sea-god in his stormy keep?"

VERSE II

In quiet and straightway, rising from his side
An ancient senator, of reposed pride,
Unseated his legs, and uttered from his soul
Great stores of bonhomie and equanimity,
— All that the Court, which shakes of night invest,
And Pope and King and Power seal the rest.

Sir Walter Raleigh
